Logging Family Score 1st & 2nd in Game of Logging Competition

The competition was fierce for 10 loggers on Saturday August 11th in Greenville, Maine for the 24th annual Game of Logging (GOL) competition. Jeremy Grignon, 4th year student at U Maine and part time logger, bested his dad John Grignon, logger from Dixfield, and came in first to win competition to earn family bragging rights. Third place went to Steve Pinkham, forester and part time logger from Rumford, making it a western Maine sweep. The huge crowd cheered on the loggers, with this year's total prize and equipment package valued at $4000.00.

The Game of Logging is hosted by Forest Heritage Days and sponsored, MEMIC, the Certified Logging Professional program, University Forests, Appalachian Mountain Club, Weyerhaeuser, Husqvarna, Maine Forest Service, Charleston Correctional, and Tel-Power which all contribute with either with time, equipment or prizes. Andy Wood, MEMIC logging safety technical representative, head judge and organizer, is meticulous with setup to assure everyone is scored consistently. The competition tests the many skills of the professional logger. Events include Speed Start, Speed Cut, Vertical Bore Cut, Precision Stump, Precision Bucking, to name a few, ending with the final Precision Felling event worth 75 points. Loggers are also subject to point deductions for safety violations.

Over $1000.00 in raffle tickets were sold, to benefit Log A Load for Kids, program of Children's Miracle Network, with proceeds going to EMMC. Winners of the chainsaw carved bear sculptured and donated by logger Mike Thurlow won by Adam Stetson, and chainsaw donated by FHD, was Ron Cooper of Greenville.

Safety Meetings

Safety Talks. Toolbox Talks. Safety Startups. Tailgate Meetings.

Whatever you call them, short discussions with workers are a great way to:

- ♦ promote safe working practices
- ♦ fight complacency
- ♦ solidify and sustain lessons from training
- ♦ increase employee engagement
- ♦ provide opportunities for feedback

From: Safestart.com

Be SMART in Your Message

Short: keep it short and simple

Message: only a single message

Avoid new info: don't teach something new; the talk should be a refresher on something they already know

Reinforce: find different ways of conveying the same message, like telling a personal story and also sharing an example specific to your workplace

Takeaway: the message should have a specific takeaway or action to Complete, what do you hope to accomplish with the talk?

Complacency

Complacency can lead to injuries and death when it comes to safety.

Remind workers to:

- ♦ Always focus on the task at hand
- ♦ Never assume something will be an easy fix
- ♦ Consider anything that could go wrong
- ♦ Take precautions, like wearing PPE, even if it seems silly
- ♦ Ask for help, even if they aren't sure they need help

From: Safety Bulletin, Sept. 4, 2018

Musculoskeletal disorder (MSD) prevention

Not every injury is the result of a one-time incident. Even if an employee follows directions every time and does the job the way he or she is told, they can still suffer painful injuries if job isn't set up safely enough.

The result: They're in pain and unable to work, leading to costs for your company and headaches for you as a Supervisor.

Ergonomic fixes make a big difference in your employees' overall health. And they may be easier to find than you think.

From: Safety Bulletin, May 25, 2018

Recommendations for Reducing Ergonomic Risk

- ♦ Early reporting of signs and symptoms can help to avoid the development of MSDs
- ♦ Pain, discomfort, numbness, or tingling can all be early signs that could be an issue in workstation layout, work positions, or duration of activities
- ♦ Inspect, maintain, and repair seating and operator controls
- ♦ Maintain good postures and neutral hand, leg, and foot positions with simple adjustments in seating supports and controls
- ♦ Stretching can relieve muscle stress, simply changing position or introducing other productive tasks into the shift may serve the same purpose
- ♦ Encouragement of physical activity and weight loss
- ♦ Encourage breaks from long durations of the same activity

Help Mike Make Wishes Come True

Mike Thurlow of Lee, a lifelong Maine logger, will run half of the Millinocket Marathon on Dec. 8, 2018, in full logging gear!

Last year's run raised over $3,500 to help grant the wishes of children in Maine. From Mike St. Peter of CLP: "Our friend did it! 13.1 miles in 4 hours, 20 minutes, and 56 seconds carrying an 18-lb chainsaw, quite an accomplishment. We should all sign up to accompany him next year! I asked him at one point how it felt lugging the saw. He stated, "like carrying a bulldozer."

This year, Thurlow has set an ambitious overall goal, hoping to raise $14,000 to grant the wishes of two children with critical illnesses. If donations exceed $7,000 (the average cost of a wish), Mike will carry a chainsaw as he runs, adding 25 lbs with chainsaw and associated safety gear. If we can raise $14,000, he will add a second chainsaw!

Please help by contributing to this fundraiser. Every dollar matters.

Thank you for your support!
